DESCRIPTIVE OF THE CONFERENCE

Dear Colleagues,

We are pleased to announce the next Microbes, Immunity and Metabolism international conference, to be held in Paris at the Institut Pasteur on November 15th-17th, 2017.

Recent studies highlight the extensive metabolic cross-talk between the microbiome, either symbiotic or pathogenic, and its host. Microbial communities dip into the host metabolic resources and produce metabolites influencing major molecular and physiological processes. On the other hand, there is now wide-recognition that immune cell differentiation and activation is intimately linked to cell subset-specific metabolic reprogramming. This meeting will bring together leading investigators in the fields of immunology, microbiology and metabolism, to discuss how the microbiome-host metabolic cross-talk can be manipulated in novel preventive and personalized therapeutic approaches.

MIM 2017 is a unique opportunity for industrial partners to re-affirm or advertise their involvement in this exciting emerging field of investigation and invest in its vibrant community. The involved experimental approaches are based on a broad range of techniques that include multi-parametric flow cytometry, next generation sequencing, gene expression profiling, metabolomics, single cell functional profiling, small molecule agonist and antagonist discovery and vaccination technologies. The field also relies critically on the support of leading journals that acknowledge the fundamental impact of cell metabolism in immunity.

The program will include ample discussion time during 4 coffee breaks to be held together with the sponsor stands in the conference hall next to the conference room, providing the delegates the opportunity to discuss with industrial representatives. Furthermore, delegates and industrials will have additional time to exchange during 2 seated lunches and two dinners. In this brochure, we offer our industrial partners a number of options to participate in MIM 2017.
